Some, like "Some Rain Must Fall" or "Somewhere Warm and Comfortable" are fairly simple and straightforward, but compelling and deeply disturbing in their way. Others are mindbending in concept, like "Toy Story" (a young boy who discovers a new planet that he plays with and observes in his room) and "Nina's Hand" (told entirely from the perspective of a woman's right hand on its last day).

Some Rain Must Fall: And Other Stories is a collection by Michel Faber, all stories published in 2000. I'm a great fan of The Crimson Petal and the White and The Book of Strange New Things and after Faber transported me to strange new worlds with each new novel, I was curious where he'd take me with fifteen short stories, particularly which genre they'd fall under.

This 1842 poem has the famous line "Into each life some rain must fall," meaning that everyone will experience difficulty and heartache at some point. The "day" is a metaphor for "life." Written after the death of his first wife and before he married his second wife, "The Rainy Day" has been interpreted as a deeply personal look into Longfellow's psyche and state of mind.

Longfellow's "The Rainy Day"

And the days are dark and dreary. Be still, sad heart, and cease repining; Behind the clouds is the sun still shining; Thy fate is the common fate of all, Into each life some rain must fall, Some days must be dark and dreary. Queen - Rain Must Fall Lyrics | Genius Lyrics

"[Some Rain Must Fall] is Knausgaard at his best... It's a rare novelist who writes about student bars and the Happy Mondays at the same time as yearning for spiritual salvation." (Max Liu Independent) "Part of Knausgaard's appeal is believability: his books may be called novels but we read them as memoirs.
